A Word of Explanation

The index to the present volume serves to bring out in the best possible way its rich content. It gives the names of people and places which are encountered in the introductory section of the work and in its main content: the portraits created by Benjamin Mary and the biographical data which has been discovered on each of the figures portrayed. The reader needs to know that he/she is being referred to the page in question and not to the biographical notes which provide the rich material; also that citations and footnotes are indexed when they provide additional information and not when they concern bibliographical references which have already been included in the Bibliography section. The titles of self-contained books written by the subjects of the biographies are not included, nor are those of the newspapers or periodicals for which they wrote, or even founded. The name of Benjamin Mary and the contributors to this volume have not been indexed. The material which resulted from the card-indexing – more than six thousand references – is shown in alphabetical order in a single listing for both kinds of entries: the names of individuals are shown in roman type and place-names in italics. The following are the detailed rules set from the beginning for the indexing of the material:

Individuals' names appear in their established form with a reference to the page on which they occur. The pages on which there are portraits are shown in bold. The names by which these people were known in former times – and are normally called even today – are shown in brackets and there is a reference in the same place; this is omitted when such an entry is immediately before or after the specific entry. The same is true of the sobriquets or special characteristics of certain figures. If someone is encountered under a name different from the familiar one, the reference is added in brackets. This is the case with 'old Petros Mavromichalis', who is included in the entry for 'Mavromichalis Petrobey'. A reference is given in the case of these citations of first name, surname, or sobriquet in brackets. In those cases – fortunately few – where it has not been possible to distinguish which is the first name and which the surname, the entry is repeated in the appropriate place without further elaboration, as in the case of 'Banousis Sevrani'. The names are shown without any note of the offices or positions which they may have held from time to time, whether elected, appointed, or even as volunteers. This rule has not been followed in the case of the clergy, who are entered under the name which they had at the time when Benjamin Mary met them. Misael Apostolidis, for example, is referred to by that name in his main entry, even though on his portrait he signs as 'archimandrite and professor at the Othonian University', while there are references to the offices which he held later and which are mentioned in his biography, as metropolitan and, chiefly, as Archbishop of Athens and All Greece. Women are entered by their full unmarried name and with a reference to the name of their husband and the relevant page reference. In the cases of men and women whose relatives lack basic information such as their first name, they are included in the main entry under the designation of 'son', 'grandson', 'daughter', or 'wife/husband'.

Place-names are shown in the form in which they appear in the text and indexed in italics. Where their different present-day name is stated, it occurs in a separate form, without a reference or any stated connection. Villages, areas or spots where lesser-known events took place are accompanied by a note in angle brackets of the broader geographical region. The same is the case when the same place-name occurs in different regions, such as 'Trikala' in Corinthia and in Thessaly. The institutions mentioned in the biographical notes appear under the name of the place where they were situated, without references. For instance, 'Mega Spilaion' and 'Aghia Lavra' are to be found only under the nearby place-name of 'Kalavryta'. This applies mainly to church and educational foundations.
